About our Publication

Decaturish.com was founded in 2013 with a single mission: to provide quality, locally sourced news to our community. Since that time, our website has grown into a respected and award-winning publication serving thousands of readers every single day.

About our team

Dan Whisenhunt grew up in Alabama and moved to the Atlanta area in 2011. He's an award-winning journalist with more than a decade of experience covering local news. His goal is to develop a sustainable, local news site free of pay walls.

Zoe Seiler is Decaturish's full-time reporter covering Decatur, Avondale Estates, Kirkwood and East Lake. She covers local government meetings, school board meetings, community events and a little bit of everything else.

George Chidi has written for the AJC, the Guardian and the Intercept, and is working on a year-long project examining the rise of violent crime in Atlanta. A former Pine Lake city councilman, the Army veteran holds a journalism degree from UMass and an MBA from Georgia Tech.

Logan C. Ritchie graduated from Emerson College in Boston, MA, with a degree in writing. She has nearly 20 years of experience as a community journalist, writing for The Jewish Advocate, Boston Tab, Jewish Telegraph Agency, The Atlanta Jewish Times, Decaturish, and more.

Nicki Salcedo writes movie reviews and personal essays. She is an author, speaker, and mental health advocate. She lives in Decatur with her husband, three cats, and 4 kids.

Sara Amis holds an MFA in Creative Writing from the University of Georgia. Her work has appeared in Rolling Stone and The Saturday Evening Post.

Dean Hesse grew up in Decatur and currently resides in Stone Mountain. He began his freelance career as a stringer covering local events for the DeKalb News/Sun in the 1990s and attended the Southeastern Center for the Arts Professional Photography Program.

What Our Readers Have to Say

As local news outlets continue to disappear, so does citizen engagement. When citizen engagement disappears, your local elected officials are not held accountable and transparency quickly erodes. Your local news outlets are the journalists who know their community, their local officials, their local subject matter experts, their area resources, etc., better than anyone. Supporting local news outlets like Decaturish is investing in your very own community

— Margaret Arnett

The AJC is great, but it only covers DeKalb if something major happens. But a lot of it is just peace of mind that someone is keeping track of what is happening in my community. Knowing that someone will be at the commission meetings and asking the police about investigations is worth the investment to me.

— Robert “Bo” Burke

There are far fewer places covering tax allocation districts, road diets and tree ordinances. I felt- and still feel- that we spend money on things that we value, and in this case, Decaturish's coverage of the people, places and things that oftentimes impact us the most is something that our community must support. Less good journalism focused on our communities results in a less informed community. A less informed community — no matter how well-intentioned they are — becomes an apathetic community. An apathetic community isn't a community at all. They're just a bunch of people who live within proximity of one another.

— Jon Effron
